

Organizing and Conducting Safety Work in Mines (Classic Reprint)

Herbert M Wilson

Excerpt from Organizing and Conducting Safety Work in Mines During the past few years there has been marked progress in safety work by mining companies. Such work has usually been started and directed by an executive, with the aid and advice of individuals or committees reporting to him, independently of the operating department. The practice has been to awaken the interest of the employees in the causes, results, and avoidance of accidents to convince them of the genuine desire of the company to bring about increased safety and to obtain the cooperation of officials and employees in suggesting and adopting protective measures.
